Cuban Travelers

A PROPOS of President Kennedy's "Wall of Freedom" around Cuba and recent editorials and letters concerning it are the following lines:

It's of a bold reporter, a story they will tell.
He went down to the Cuban land; the nearest place to hell.

He'd been there many times before, but now the law does say,

The only way to Cuba is with the C.I.A.

William Worthly isn't worthy to enter our door;

He went down to Cuba; he's not American anymore.

But somehow it is strange to hear Jack's State Department say,

"You are living in the Free World; in the Free World you must stay."

Five thousand dollars or a five-year sentence may well be,

For students who had the nerve to think that travelin' is free.

They should have listened closer, when they heard the experts say,

"This modern world is getting so much smaller every day."

Well there really is no need to travel to these evil lands,

And though the list grows larger you must try to understand,

And try hard not to worry, if someday you should hear,

"The whole world is off limits; visit Disneyland this year."

HARRY NIER, Chairman,

Fair Play for Cuba Committee.

Denver.
